A high-angle, top-down photograph of a large, diverse crowd of people walking on a light-colored, possibly white, surface. The people are rendered as small, colorful figures, some in silhouette, others in bright colors like yellow, blue, and orange. Long, soft shadows are cast by the figures, suggesting a low sun position. The overall scene is busy and dynamic. In the center of the image, there is a solid blue rectangular box containing white text.

THE ART OF BRINGING PEOPLE TOGETHER

"For me, the people and how they interact with each other and what they come together to make is the most important aspect of each painting."

Craig Alan is an artist with a unique and powerful vision. His work sends out a clear and optimistic message; when we are prepared to make a contribution to the wider world and work together, we are able to be a part of something beautiful, fascinating and extraordinary which is bigger than ourselves. His art is about more than form, colour, style or genre. It is, he says, all about the importance of belonging.
